OUR PROGRAMS

Institute of Project Management Professionals program offers a focused concentration in Project Management. This rigorous curriculum integrates Project Management tools with management concepts, giving practitioners the skills to manage an entire lifecycle of a product or program. This concentration in Project Management is designed to expand the skills of senior level program or portfolio managers. Member Candidate will be challenged to contribute to the current body of knowledge in this area through scholarly research and writing. The program at Institute of Project Management Professionals train students to become Project Management professionals. The program prepares Member Candidate to think and act strategically and enhance their abilities to make positive contributions in their chosen area of management expertise.

The Project Management program with Institute of Project Management Professionals is an innovative program of study designed to support senior project practitioners in the development of their role. Bringing a broad range of benefits to the organizations in which they work. The unique program of study provides a bespoke learning system tailored to the needs of individuals and organizations. The program emphasizes on three sets of competencies:

- Specific Concentration discipline
- Leadership and Change Management
- Research and Writing

In addition, graduation requires the approval of a dissertation which documents the member's research processes and presents the findings and conclusions of that research, and suggests future research. The dissertation is divided into two major segments: the proposal and the full dissertation. The proposal will be developed by the Candidate, and then submitted by the mentor to the Institute Review Board. The research will then be conducted and written up, resulting in the full dissertation, which is then reviewed by a committee. These processes are conducted under the supervision of IPMP Doctoral Fellows, or Professors.

Graduation Requirements

In addition to the successful completion of 104 course credit hours with an acceptable performance, members must also satisfactorily complete and defend their research with a dissertation. The dissertation must be published in Dama International Journal Researchers which is the official publishing journal of the Institute.

Careers

The program offers a research-based career development path for experienced and senior professionals who wish to extend their professional practice and expertise through a reflective route leading to a professional research degree. The Professionals in Project Management provides the next rung on the ladder of personal, professional and Organisational development for senior practitioners. The program is designed to meet the needs of practitioners who wish to keep abreast of new developments, refine their research and reflection skills, and work at doctoral level on challenges, issues or problems that are of direct relevance to their own professional interests and wider institutional concerns. Participants will be looking to engage in deep learning, make a unique contribution to research and practice and address issues of concern to contemporary organizations and projects. The program builds upon a decade of expertise within the National Centre for Project Management (NCPM) in supporting work-centred and practice-based postgraduate learners.

Teaching Methods

The program is delivered over intensive residential weekends, normally Saturdays & Sundays, 8 days per month (up to 96 days in total per year). The program is structured into three phases, each with its own assessment regime, designed to support the learner through to final submission. Participants must satisfy the requirements of each phase before they may proceed to the next. DFPM is not a conventional classroom-taught program, but rather a guided one in which participants will be formulating and pursuing their own particular inquiry together with others during the eight-day meetings, where they will work as a whole group and also in smaller learning groups with a supervisor and through email contact in between. Leading practitioners and researchers will share insights, frameworks and perspectives and provide details about their own developing personal inquiries, which will be used as a basis for discussion, reflection and discovery. Participants will develop into an extended community of researching practitioners engaged in parallel journeys, which are participative, mutually informing and supportive, yet insightful and questioning. This will involve participants in exploring their practice in discussion, intensive reading and reflective writing.
